

Social Media, Public Speech and the First Amendment

On May 23rd, Rebecca Buckwalter-Poza, a writer and legal analyst, tweeted “I sued the President, and I won” after a Court ruled that President Donald Trump violated her First Amendment rights by blocking her on twitter. The District Court had found that the Constitution applies to social media platforms of public officials and that the president’s twitter feed is a public forum.

Join Attorney Yordana Wysocki to discuss what this means as government officials and employees, when a private social media account is considered “public” and how this intersects with employee relationships and discipline.

Ms. Wysocki has represented and defended local governments and their employees for the last ten years with Hervas, Condon & Bersani, P.C. in Itasca, Illinois.
